The three-week program is free, and participants must be a first- or second-year undergraduate at the University. SuccessSeekers is run by the Association of Black Women in Academia, which is a non-profit organization dedicated to advancing the careers of Black women in academic research, teaching and administration. Participants must have a GPA of 2.0 or higher, and must complete the application by Dec. 15. Students who meet these criteria are then selected for either Academic Attention or Growth Mentorship. For the latter, mentors will monitor the student’s progress and work with the student throughout the semester. Academic Attention mentors will work with students for one or two semesters to help them succeed academically. Those selected for Academic Attention will receive guidance from one of the following counselors: Jackie Williams, associate professor of history at UNC. Julius Lindner, assistant professor of history at UNC. Vivian Tatum, assistant professor of biology at Carolina. Winston Stevenson, associate professor of history at UNC. Of the six available slots, three slots are reserved for students at Carolina. Interested students can apply by visiting the following link on the UNC website. Three aminobenzoate herbicides are toxic to Spirorchis, the eel-infective schistosome of the freshwater cercariae, and they target the same enzyme, ferrochelatase. Ferrochelatase is a heme-containing enzyme required for the synthesis of heme in both the parasite, Spirorchis, and its host, the freshwater snail, Biomphalaria glabrata. This study determined the cytotoxicity of three aminobenzoate herbicides (imazapic, imazethapyr, and imazaquin) to 3 organ systems (proliferative tissue, reproductive tissues, and developing embryos). Molluscs are the intermediate host of S. mansoni. Ferrochelatase is strongly inhibited by aminobenzoate herbicides in M. littoralis; however, larval development is not significantly inhibited, suggesting that the ferrochelatase enzyme is not absolutely essential for larval development. Growth inhibition and induction of encystment occur in Biomphalaria glabrata infected with Spirorchis, and one or more metabolite(s) of the herbicide(s) is hydrolyzed in the snail. We therefore tested whether B. glabrata is also susceptible to imazapic, imazethapyr, and imazaquin. All three herbicides were equally toxic, rapidly killing B. glabrata during the first 24 hours and inhibiting worm development (female oviposition and egg maturation). The embryos of B. glabrata exposed to imazaquin were significantly shorter than those of controls, and the larvae of B. glabrata exposed to imazaquin were almost completely incapable of metamorphosis into adults. In addition, imazaquin caused an abnormal movement of the gut of treated parasites, which suggests that imazaquin is interfering with nutrition. var fs =
