I am using a tool to make an.exe for a game I wrote in Python, and this works well. However, I want to be able to just start my.exe from within the.exe when the user clicks on it. My research has shown that the line: os.startfile(exe) will accomplish this. However, I also want it to save changes to the.exe if it gets closed. I have tried adding the line, os.chdir(r"C:\Users\{USER}\Desktop") but this has not worked. I also tried to add os.startfile(exe,"C:\Users\{USER}\Desktop") which also has not worked. How can I achieve this? A: You want the working directory to be the Desktop when you start the program. You can do that in the environment by the using os.chdir(r"C:\Users\{USER}\Desktop"). You can also use that only for the part of the program that gets the path from os.path.realpath(_file_) and not the part that starts the program (for example, the __name__ == '__main__'). Q: Python/Regex: how to split on whitespace only if I do not want to include new line characters (' ')? I'm trying to clean a large text file and strip out only whitespace and special characters like tab, comma, semicolon and so forth. The text file comes with multiple line breaks. When I do this: raw_text = re.sub(r'\s+', '', file_content) raw_text = re.sub('^\s+', '', raw_text) it removes the breaks from the string properly, but also removes all the whitespace (characters
